

DAY OF THE MAN WHO GIVES

devil; it had become a drive of flaming souls to establish a new concept, a great ideal, a new social spirit!

Samuel Gompers has said, "This was a war; now it is a crusade?"

This is the story of an epoch in a sentence!

Wars may be fought for material things. Crusades are always for ideals!

And only as ideals are set up and imbedded in the human heart and made the measure of human practice and the center of social concepts do we win forward to higher civilizations.

And because this is so no man is any longer a lone individual concerned only about his own affairs, no man is apart by himself, no man is isolated. Each man is a world influence, either for good or bad, for progress or reaction.

Who is a machinist? Who is a painter? Who is a carpenter? Who, indeed, with the world on fire! Who, indeed, with the wreck of dead timbers crashing about him, and with the new green of fresh things growing by leaps to replace them! No man is any of those things today—not just those; he is much more. He is a mechanic at work on a new world, wrecking and rebuilding, smashing and creating, tearing away grossness that he may weave out of dreams!

Men are dying by the thousand. Some curse the war for the life it costs. That is wrong. God bless the men for the lives they give. That is right! Was it Victor Hugo who said that a human life has no value except as it contributes to the social good? Glorious are the lives that go out over there!

What good am I if I am no good to the world? I am the most good when I give most to the world. If to give life is to give the most, then they who give their lives over there are the world's pure gold!

World progress, the birth and death of eras, has never been a thing for pale sentimentalists or yellow cowards. It has always been a thing of red bloom and courage—a thing of life and death; death that there might be life!

So is this great world tumult, this great social cyclone.

This is the day of the man who gives; the day of the man who takes has gone. Selfishness is of yesterday—individual selfishness. A new, but noble, selfishness is coming among us. It is social selfishness. The thing today is not "what is good for me?" but "what is good for the people?" The fight is not for "something for me," but for "everything for everybody."

And all of this idealism, this nobility of spirit and purpose, has come to the world through the struggles of men and women at work. The age-old struggle against oppression has flamed out into a world fire in which the old must be burned away forever. Forever the workers have fought this fight and led the way to progress. They fight it today and they lead it today. There will be the glory, theirs the great reward. They have always had to fight for freedom because they have always needed it. They have always carried the torch, for darkness has always been upon them.

But we are at the peak of the struggle—at the top!

As you do the daily task that is your part in this great convulsion, think of that! Let your emotion run wild within you! Fill your lungs with the breath of the great adventure!

An age is dying! An age is being born!
